IMPORTANT NOTICE

With federal funding for WQPT PBS at serious risk, we're forced to examine the efficiencies of the services we provide for our valued members.

We will be reducing the size of this printed guide to include only program listings with no additional content.

You may also prefer to view our current program listings through our homepage at WQPT.org, where our entire schedule is available, not just the primetime schedule.

Thank you for your understanding and assistance in reducing our costs during this difficult time.

Thank you.

Your voice matters!

As a public media viewer and listener, you know how valuable WQPT PBS is to the communities we serve.

Federal funding, which amounts to about $1.60 per person annually, makes public media possible. The investment directly supports local stations like WQPT PBS—enabling us and other stations to provide you with essential programs and services.

If federal funding is eliminated, WQPT PBS could be forced to cut hallmark educational content, important public safety communications during natural disasters, professional development and resources for teachers, music and cultural programming, unparalleled local content and documentaries like Wharton, More Than Monopoly and Your Dutch Friend, and much more. Some stations could even be forced off the air.

Join Protect My Public Media's action network to protect stations like WQPT PBS, and NPR stations like Tri-States Public Radio and WVIK.

WQPT PBS Celebrates America's 250th—With You!

WQPT PBS is proud to join the national celebration of America's 250th anniversary by engaging our community in meaningful, local ways.

Over the next two years, we'll reflect on our nation's past, engage with its present, and look ahead to its future—honoring our region's deep roots, celebrating the diversity that shaped America, and inspiring everyone to see their unique part in its unfolding story.

Here's what's ahead:

- Exclusive preview screenings of Ken Burns' *The American Revolution, followed by panel discussions that bring the past into today's conversations.
- Our First Book initiative will put civic-minded books into children's hands, helping young readers understand their role in a democracy.
- Documenting 'Civic Sparks' — our production team is filming content that highlights regional people making a difference in the Mississippi Valley region.
- Volunteer with WQPT, our new outreach program connecting the station and viewers with service opportunities at nonprofit organizations across the Quad Cities.

Stay connected to everything we're doing by following us @wqptpbs & visit wqpt.org/250.

Thank You, Chris

Chris Gramkow—our longtime marketing, creative, collaborator and partner—is stepping away after 29 incredible and dedicated years with us.

Chris began in 1996, designing our monthly program guide, 354 issues in all. His original layout earned national recognition, and ever since, he's been the driving force behind our public-facing brand.

From our station logo and countless marketing materials to our digital presence and ever-evolving and nationally-recognized website, he continually raised the bar—balancing strategy, impactful design, rich content, and engaging, user-friendly experiences that kept our audiences and viewers like you connected every step of the way.

“Public television has been one of the great through-lines of my life, personally and professionally,” he shared. “I've had the honor of working with several PBS stations—including PBS Guam—but WQPT has always felt like home and family. I'm excited to see where the team takes things next—their creativity and fresh energy are already moving the station forward in impactful ways.”

Now a Colorado resident of over 20 years, Chris added, “WQPT PBS holds a special place in my heart—not just as my hometown station, but as the starting point for my professional career. In some way, nearly all of my clients have found me through connections that trace back to the station.”

Chris brought more than just immense talent—donating over $150,000 in In-Kind contributions to support our community-driven mission, calmly handled countless last-minute requests, responded to emails after hours, and consistently supported the station's evolving needs. Even as he planned his departure, he helped ensure a smooth transition.

Chris, thank you for your exceptional work, dedication, creativity, and heart. You have helped shape how WQPT PBS shows up in the world, and we're better because of it.
